

JAWS NEWSLETTER

SUBMISSION GUIDELINES

The JAWS Newsletter provides postgraduate students with a great opportunity to inform the community about their ongoing research, and to share results and reflections. Students do not necessarily have to be enrolled in an anthropology programme: interdisciplinarity and any approach that is likely to provide anthropologists with suggestions and ideas are most welcome. Papers can be submitted for the Research Reports section, or for the Tomorrow's Researcher's Today one, according to the following guidelines.

Research Reports

Ph.D. Students (and colleagues) at advanced stages of their research can submit a research report, in order to share the results of their fieldwork, and/or some reflections on their own research. Research reports should have a maximum limit of 1000 words (although longer papers may be considered) and should include in-text references and a bibliography.

Tomorrow's Researchers Today

Ph.D. (or, exceptionally M.A. and M.Phil.) students in the initial stages of their research are invited to submit a paper for this section. "Tomorrow's Researchers Today" papers are mainly meant to inform the community about new researchers and developing projects, rather than to provide research results, therefore references and a bibliography are not necessarily required. Papers should have a maximum limit of 500 words.

We are looking forward to reading your papers!
